WILLIAMS 1927-1982
Brick Chimney, Howqua
April 1969
gouache on paper
57.5 × 76.5 cm
(image: 45.5 × 76.5 cm)
signed lower centre:
Fred Williams

$105,000

Brick Chimney, Howqua, 1969 demonstrates Williams' mastery of the gouache medium and his sensitive response to a particular place. The Howqua River, 20 kms east of Mansfield towards Mt Buller, inspired Williams to create a series of works on paper over April 1969. This was Williams' first sustained river series and there is a strong sense that he was exploring how moving water reacts visually and chromatically against the static quality and earthy colours of the surrounding banks. Now a popular camping spot, the Howqua area is littered with remnants of the goldmining that took place in the Howqua hills. Williams described in his diary a "curious old brick chimney left standing on the opposite bank [noting] it looks very strange amongst the trees." This observation forms the basis of this gouache and a related oil painting of the same title. Over a pre-painted tan base colour, Williams introduces a strip format that emphasizes the horizontality of the landscape and contrasts the flowing river against a more solid bank. On top of this base, vertical elements, including the chimney, were laid down; devices that both anchor and divide the landscape.

ROBERT NELSON GILCHRIST (1821-1877)

A RETURNED AUSTRALIAN DIGGER WHO FOUND GOLD AT KILDONAN

BY JOHN HAWKINS

A gold and Scottish river pearl Celtic Cross marked Kildonan, probably made in the workshop of the Edinburgh goldsmith, Peter Westren, circa 1869, who advertised such crosses for sale. The brooch commemorates St. Donan who founded the kirk at Kildonan in the 7th century on a tributary to the Helmsdale River in Sutherland. Mined for only one year using the Australian system of a Digger's Licence, in this case issued by the landowner, the Duke of Sutherland. The Celtic triquetra endless knot decoration to the pendant is found on Scottish 8th century Pictish stones<sup>1</sup> and the Book of Kells, produced in the late 8th century or early 9th century in a Columban monastery in either Ireland, Scotland or England. This continues an ancient lineage of decoration understood by this ducal family who collected Pictish stones for their private museum at Dunrobin. Collection Robyn Hawkins.

The discovery of Kildonan gold is recorded in well-illustrated detail by Ron Callander: Robert Nelson Gilchrist (1821-1877) A Scottish 'Hargraves. What is not recorded is the history behind a small group of gold jewels made from the gold discovered by Gilchrist.

St. Ninian, St. Finian, and St. Donnan in the east and St. Columba in the west were trying to convert the resident Pagan Teutonic Picts to Christianity. It is calculated that St. Donnan entered Scotland about the year 580 AD, accompanied by a much larger band of disciples than the twelve who had accompanied St. Columba to Iona. This is confirmed by the churches of St. Donnan named after him in Caithness, Ross and Inverness-shire. The kirk in Sutherland at Kildonan (the 'kil' prefix means church in Gaelic) is where:

The parish suffered grievously during the Clearances, Kildonan church has been a great centre of Irish missionary zeal; witnessed the plundering march of heathen Teutons; been cherished by the royal Abbey of Scone, less ancient than itself; and been deprived of its congregation by a heritor more interested in sheep than men.<sup>2</sup>

The pagan Celts accepted the Irish Christian missionaries even when they did not always accept their religion, hence Pagan and Christian symbols are found side by side on Pictish standing stones along the north-east coast of Scotland. A weathered natural carved triquetra stone that is much decayed remains at Kildonan.

The Book of Kells, now in Trinity College, Dublin, is probably the defining source of Irish triquetra endless knot decoration used to decorate Dublin-made Irish jewels from the middle of the 19th century, particularly by Edmund Johnson and his brother, Joseph Johnson Jun.<sup>3</sup>

St. John from the Book of Kells, with Irish triquetra endless knot decoration in manuscript form, as created circa 800 AD. Collection Trinity College, Dublin.

The 9th century Ogham Brooch from Ballyspellan, Co. Kilkenny, in the Collection of the National Museum of Ireland, engraved with Celtic triquetra endless knot designs as found in the late 8th century Book of Kells, which, from the 17th century, has been at Trinity College Dublin. A copy of this brooch by Edmund Johnson was bought in Dublin in August 1849 by Prince Albert and given to Queen Victoria for Christmas; the Queen later designated it an Heirloom of the Crown, hence it remains in the Royal Collection. The cabochon garnets to the royal brooch are a 19th century enrichment, the original shown here having silver beads.

Donnan and his fellow monks finally settled on the island of Eigg, resulting in his martyrdom by a Pictish Queen when he and fifty-two of his followers were butchered within the refectory of the island monastery, leading to his sainthood.

The Class II Kirkyard Stone of circa 800AD, one of five standing stones in Aberlemno parish. This well-known group provided Christian stone crosses for Scottish jewellers to copy in the 19th century, one side using Celtic triquetra endless knot decoration.<sup>4</sup>

A brooch made from Kildonan Scottish gold and freshwater pearls, the central citrine or 'cairn gorm' is associated with the Cairngorm mountains. The authenticity of the triquetra decoration has been forgotten, suggesting a non-ducal commission. Engraved 'MUIRHEAD & SONS / SUTHERLAND GOLD'.<sup>5</sup>

Victorian nugget set locket, inscribed Kildonan, sold for £10,000, by Chorley's Auctions UK.

A note with this lot reads: Locket made of gold from the Duke of Sutherland's Mine at Kildonan (near Dunrobin) Sutherlandshire. Given to Louisa Blanche Howard (Mrs Cecil Foljambe) July 1869 by Charlotte Duchess of Norfolk [1788-1870] who was daughter of the 1st Duke of Sutherland and Elizabeth Countess of Sutherland.

This would suggest that this ducal family commissioned objects made of local gold as gifts to their friends. The Dunrobin Museum is in a garden pavilion, the front part of which was built in 1732 as a summerhouse, the back being an addition of 1878 which created a museum for the family collection of Pictish stones. This outstanding collection includes almost all those stones found on the narrow, fertile strip of land of the north-east coast of the Sutherland estates.

The Celtic Cross model became standardised after the raising of the Dean Ramsay cross in Edinburgh based on a cross from Iona. Completed in 1879 with bronze mounts by Elkington & Co., sculpted by Farmer and Brindley, and designed by Robert Rowand Anderson. The illustration of this important Scottish Celtic Cross Edinburgh jewel is courtesy The Antique Jewellery Company.<sup>6</sup>

Aberdeen jewellery was generally of minimalist design with little, if any, engraving and featured salmon pink and grey granite. The best known Aberdeen jewellers were M. Rettie and Sons. The Edinburgh goldsmiths, G&M Crichton, excelled at plaid brooches in silver decorated with citrines and amethysts. Other notable Edinburgh jewellers include McKay and Cunningham, Marshall and Sons and Meyer and Mortimer. The key firms making Kildonan gold jewels were James Muirhead and Sons, Glasgow, Peter MacGregor Westren, 103 Princes Street, Edinburgh, and F.G. Wilson of Inverness.

Gold was found in the banks of the Helmsdale, or Strath Kildonan, in 1868, by Mr Gilchrist, a native of Sutherlandshire, who had been a gold digger in Australia. The gold diggings were worked at Kildonan, with the approval and assistance of the Duke of Sutherland, for about four years with considerable success. Some heavy nuggets were discovered, the heaviest being valued at £15. Specimens of Kildonan gold, in various forms, may be seen in the Dunrobin Museum. His Grace marked his sense of gratitude to Mr Gilchrist for having made the discovery by presenting him with a gold watch and chain, in presence of a number of gold diggers in Strath Helmsdale.

This gold watch was cased in Kildonan gold supplied by F G Wilson:

... jeweller Inverness. the well-known purchaser of the Sutherland gold, has in stock assortment of rings, brooches, earrings. scarf-pins. sleeve-links. studs, and other ornaments made of Kildonan gold, which is offered for sale at moderate prices.

THE CERAMIC COLLECTORS SOCIETY

Ceramic Collectors Society
PO Box 1, Darlinghurst, NSW 1300
ceramiccollectorsociety@gmail.com

Ceramic Collectors Society at the 2022 AAADA Antiques & Art Fair Sydney

The Ceramic Collectors Society was founded on the 13th of September 1949, by a small group of antique dealers and ceramic collectors in Sydney. Its aim is to promote appreciation and knowledge of ceramic art and to form a meeting ground for all those interested in ceramics.

The Society has staged a number of exhibitions: "Chinese Pottery and Porcelain" (1951), "Chelsea and Chelsea-Derby" (1952), "18th Century Worcester" (1953), "Continental Porcelain" (1954), "Old English China" (1959), "Worcester Porcelain" (1978), "Chelsea, Derby and Bow" (1979), "Oriental Ceramics and their Influence on Europe" (1982), "Pottery Through the Ages" (1985), "Fired with Enthusiasm: Celebrating Ceramic Diversity" (1999), and "Fragile Treasures (2009).

We hold regular meetings of members for illustrated lectures and discussions, frequently accompanied with relevant ceramic and decorative pieces from the collections of presenters and members, to view and enjoy. Presenters are drawn from within the Society's membership and from local, national and international experts. The Society has also organised seminars and workshops with visiting experts; in recent years they have been on French porcelain, 18th and 19th century English ceramics, and 20th century ceramics. Occasionally, visits are organised to places of interest such as exhibitions and collections. This Newsletter is issued six times a year. The Society normally meets on fourth Monday of every second month.

Recently the society delivered a study-day on the subject of 'Dutch Delft' at a Heritage House in Glebe, Sydney. The event focused on the Chinese aesthetic of Dutch Delft. Members later displayed Delft pieces from their own collections. A lavish lunch and afternoon tea ended the day.

The Ceramic Collectors Society was one of several decorative arts groups at the Australian Antique & Art Dealers Association fair at the White Bay Cruise Terminal in Sydney. A members' information stand operated during the four-day fair and attracted several new members.

Our stand included a display case of items from the private collections of our committee members. The theme was "All the colours of the rainbow and more".

TOFT WARE

English brothers Thomas Toft and Ralph Toft were early exponents of the English slipware-style, so much so that the practice is sometimes referred to as "Toft ware" regardless of who produced the piece.

Thomas and Ralph Toft created large slipware plates, dishes and platters, boldly decorated with trailed-slip decoration, and are now highly prized pieces held in several museums around the world.

Thomas, whose work is most prevalent to see in museum collections today, potted in Staffordshire, England, in the mid- to late-1600s. He would first coat the earthenware clay-shape with a uniform coat of 'slip', which is essentially clay mixed with water, to form a smooth, even foundation for his decoration. Toft then used "trailings" of liquid clay of a different colour on top of the slip foundation to decorate the piece.

Ralph is believed to be Thomas' brother, but some researchers say he could have been Thomas' son as the latter worked much later. Whatever the case, Ralph employed a similar technique and decorative style to create his slipware pottery.

Here are four examples of “Toft Ware” plates from various museums, all potted in the 17th-century in Staffordshire. Can you tell which Toft made what, the giveaway is clear to see. Because of the good preservation of these plates and dishes, most scholars now believe they were used primarily as decorative pieces rather than as cooking- or dining-ware.

1. Plate by Ralph Toft, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.
2. “The Mermaid Dish,” by Thomas Toft, Victoria & Albert Museum, East Kensington, London.
3. Plate by Thomas Toft, Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.
4. Dish by Ralph Toft, The Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, England.

The Royal Couple

Two slip-ware dishes made by Thomas Toft of Staffordshire in the late 1600s to honour two different Royal couples of England.

This large dish on the left is a ‘charger’ and was made as a display piece to celebrate a marriage. Though the couple depicted are not identified by any inscription, it is likely that they represent King Charles II of England and his 24-year-old bride, Catherine of Braganza, daughter of the king of Portugal. They were married in 1662, two years after the monarchy of England had been restored following the Cromwellian interregnum, and it is likely that dishes like this were made specifically for display in the houses of Royalists.

The second plate is a later 43cm-diameter dish, circa 1670s, and features the Duke of York, later to be James II of England, and his bride Anne Hyde. They are placed above a formalised lily. On the rim there is a trellis pattern, as well as the potter’s signature, ‘Thomas Toft’.

Both dishes are made of Staffordshire slip-decorated earthenware. Works like these were being produced in the decades just before factory methods were introduced into the pottery industry.

Toft was the exemplar of slip-ware earthenware plates made in England during this period.

There is nothing new about Royal commemorative wares!

MOURNING RING FOR REAR-ADMIRAL ISAAC SMITH, THE FIRST MEMBER OF THE ENDEAVOUR'S CREW TO SET FOOT ON LAND AT KAMAY (BOTANY BAY) IN APRIL, 1770.

[London : maker unknown, ca. 1831]. Diamond, pearl and enamel set into a gold ring with the following inscription engraved on the inside of the band: 'Rear-Adml Isaac Smith Ob 2 July 1831 Ob 78'. Housed in a crimson morocco box with brass clasp.

An extraordinary survival: a mourning ring for the memory of Rear-Admiral Isaac Smith (1752-1831). Smith is distinguished for being the first Englishman to set foot on the east coast of the Australian continent.

As a 17-year-old, on 29 April 1770, Smith was the first to go ashore from HM Bark Endeavour's yawl on the south side of Kamay (Botany Bay), ahead of Lieutenant James Cook, Banks, Solander, Parkinson, the Tahitian Tupia, and a party of armed marines accompanying them in the ship's pinnace and long-boat. The landing was made after the intruders had been challenged by two Gweagal warriors, and musket shots had been fired. Cook ordered the young man to 'Jump out, Isaac!'

Although Smith's stepping onto Gweagal land carries with it immense symbolic significance, it should also be noted that Smith was one of three men, including Lieutenant Zachary Hicks and Surgeon William Monkhouse, who collected short lists of words from the language of the Gweagal with whom they interacted during the Endeavour's brief sojourn at Kamay. These words survived in a manuscript that was later compiled by William Lanyon, a shipmate of Smith on Cook's second voyage. Fortunately, this manuscript was published in 1979 by Lanyon's descendant, linguist Dr Peter Lanyon-Orgill, prior to its being lost. The existence of these word-lists suggests that at least some friendly encounters between the Europeans and the Gweagal must have taken place.

Smith served on Cook's first and second voyages to the Pacific. He was related to Cook by marriage, as he was the cousin of Elizabeth Cook, the commander's wife. On both voyages – on the second, as master's mate – Smith assisted with surveying and cartography. He was given his own command after his return from the second voyage in 1775. He continued to serve in the Royal Navy until 1794, when ill-health forced his retirement. Smith spent his remaining years domiciled in Clapham with his cousin, Elizabeth Cook, where he died in 1831.

In his will, dated 18 December 1827, Smith bequeathed 'unto my dearest Cousin Mrs Eliz Cook of Clapham in Surrey two hundred guineas for a ring and mourning and all or any part of my effects in plate books or furniture at her house at Clapham she may choose to accept as a mark of my great regard and respect for her knowing she does not wish a larger legacy.' He also left nineteen pounds for the son and daughters of his late cousin Charles Smith 'for a ring of remembrance' and eighteen for the same to both Elizabeth Ann Stuart and Mary Marston. The Captain Cook Museum in Whitby holds one of the aforementioned rings, which is identical in all respects – including the engraved legend – to the ring offered here. It is likely that all of these rings were made by the same jeweller.

Available for sale at Douglas Stewart Fine Books for $48,000.

JESSIE SCARVELL 1862 – 1950

LAURINE DIGGINS FINE ART
diggins.com.au

Scarvell was a student of William Lister Lister and exhibited regularly with the Art Society of New South Wales in the 1890s. She was an exponent of Australian Impressionism and painted en plein air and her work is represented in the S.H. Ervin collection and the Art Gallery of NSW. Scarvell was selected to be included in the Exhibition of Australian Art in London organised by the Trustees of the Art Gallery of New South Wales and held at Grafton Galleries in September 1898. She was represented by five paintings including (Liverpool Range, Murrurundi, NSW). The exhibition featured 114 artists, including the well-known leaders of the Australian Impressionist movement, Streeton; Roberts; Conder; McCubbin; as well as a number of women artists, whose names have not become as celebrated today.

The subject of Glenalvon, Murrurundi seems to be one Scarvell painted on several occasions, the rural landscape around the mountains of the Liverpool Ranges in the Upper Hunter region of NSW. The pastoral town of Murrurundi is surrounded by mountains, located on the banks of the Pages River, a tributary of the Hunter River and was the terminus of the northern train line from 1872. There is a harmonious use of colour, with the muted soft purples, grey and green of the background contrasted against the brighter green, blue and touches of pink in the foreground. The painterly marks, particularly evident in the depiction of the stream and grassy bank, and the focus point of yellow flowered pasture weed are reminiscent of archetypical Australian Impressionist paintings such as Charles Conder's Herrick's Blossom c.1888 and Arthur Streeton's Golden Summer, Eaglemont 1889.

GOOD, BETTER BEST. SILVER FOR EVERY POCKET.

One of the nicest things about collecting silver is that you can find objects that you can actually use without fear of chipping or breaking them. Furthermore, you can find useful items in almost every price range.

If you come from a generation that eats avocado whole, you can enhance the pleasure of eating it with a Georgian teaspoon at a cost of well under $100. The shape of an early George III fiddle pattern teaspoon is perfectly suited to scooping the avocado out of its skin. If you are of the younger generation, using a silver fork to smash it onto your multigrain sourdough will enhance the pleasure of preparing it. The marks on it will tell you where it was made, when it was made and who made it.

Further up the price scale you could consider collecting eighteenth century forks and spoons to be used on special occasions. These range in price from $100 to $300 each and are readily bought singly or in sets. You shouldn't put them in the dishwasher but if you wash and dry them by hand you will find that you will not have to polish them.

At the upper range of the market a slip top spoon makes a perfect soup spoon. These were all made before 1650 and are a forerunner of the modern spoon. They are so called after the old word "slipping" meaning pruning, because, unlike other spoons of that era, they do not have an ornamental knop at the end. Any English silver made before the civil war of the mid century is rare and you are looking at a price range of $3,000 to $5,000.

1. Teaspoon London 1824 made by William Johnson $45

2. Tablespoon London 1779 made by George Smith $195

3. Slip top spoon

Teapots come at a cost of anything between a few hundred dollars and many thousands of dollars. Whether you want the satisfaction of pouring your tea from a small "bachelors" teapot or impressing your guests with a grand Victorian tea set, there is a teapot for almost every pocket. A small teapot made early in the last century can be acquired for as little as $300. A Georgian or late Victorian teapot will usually start at $800 to $1000, rising to $10,000+ for a highly sought after George I "bullet" teapot. A Victorian or Edwardian tea set will range in cost from $1500 to as much as $15,000 depending on the number of vessels and their quality.

Teapot Chester 1915 made by Barker Bros $550

Teapot London 1844 made by William Haughton $950

Bullet Teapot Exeter 1728 made by Samuel Wilmot POA

Goblet. 1873 $99,

Goblet London 1799 made by John Robbins $1,550

Goblet Dublin 1708
made by David Rummieu

A silver goblet is a wonderful thing to drink wine out of. If you are a red wine drinker, a little over two thirds of surveyed users preferred the taste of red wine drunk out of an ungilded silver goblet to the taste of it when drunk from a glass. The chemical interaction between the silver and the wine softens its taste and enhances the flavour of the wine. If you are a white wine drinker you could find a goblet that has a gilded interior. The gilded silver will not change the taste of the wine but, because silver is such a good conductor of heat and cold, a chilled wine will cool the goblet and enhance the physical sensation of it against your lips and against your fingers around the stem.

You can buy a good Victorian goblet for under $1000. Always look for a piece that is fully and clearly hallmarked. Many goblets are hallmarked on the side of the cup and these are worn more easily than those that are marked to the underside of the foot. You should be able to read the marks that will tell you where it was made, when it was made and who made it. If you buy it from a dealer, they should be able to tell you what the marks are and you can easily verify them by going on to the net and searching one of the major silver sites. Most auction houses will also do this, but they are not as reliable.

Sometimes this works in the buyers favour. Recently a goblet was catalogued by a well known auctioneer as having "spurious" marks and sold for a third of its retail value. In fact the marks were from a provincial assay office in England and the cataloguer simply did not recognise them. But this is for the sophisticated collector only. If you are not cautious you may well be disappointed.

If you want to treat yourself to something special you could look for a goblet made in the reign of George III. Goblets made before 1800 are almost always hand made and you should look for one with a good weight. You could expect to pay between $1500 and $3000 for one in good condition.

Sometimes rare and important pieces come on to the market. Silver made by the Huguenot refugees who came to Great Britain at the end of the seventeenth century are considered to exemplify the finest achievements of the silversmiths art and their works always command a premium. After the Battle of Boyne in 1690 there was little Irish silver left, it having been melted down to pay the rival armies. Recovery was slow so that a piece made in 1708 is very rare. Hence a goblet made by the Huguenot maker David Rummieu is worthy of a museum and justifies a price of almost $30,000.

In case this sounds expensive, by comparison an Elizabeth I Communion cup will cost as much as $50,000. The purchase of silver at this level is not for the faint hearted and anyone contemplating it should seek the advice of an expert specialist in silver who is a member of the Australian Art and Antique Dealers Association. AAADA members, The Woodshed Antiques, Rutherford, Lafite Fine Silver & Leven Antiques all provided items that are illustrated.

If you are interested in learning more about collecting, making or just appreciating silver you should join the Silver Society of Australia. It holds regular meetings in Brisbane, Sydney, Melbourne and Adelaide. It also publishes a bi monthly newsletter with articles about all aspects of both antique and modern silver. It may be contacted by emailing the secretary at ADRIENNEWILSON@IINET.NET.AU.

THE FASCINATING AUSTRALIAN CAREER OF WORLD WAR II REFUGEE, ARTIST ERNEST MARCUSE

BY ROBERT (BOB) METSELAAR

Just like the Harbour Bridge, this is an iconic painting about the construction, prior to its accidental partial collapse in 1970 of Melbourne's Westgate Bridge, used by millions of motorists every week, and currently being expanded.

Born in Berlin, Ernest Marcuse (1900-'85) studied at the Berlin School of Interior Design & Cabinetmaking and at the Reimann School (1) before working as a freelance commercial artist, specialising in architectural, industrial and figurative drawing. When Ernest Marcuse fled Germany to Australia during World War II he never thought he'd be recruited by the Australian Army as an artist. Unlike the many thousands of migrants who passed through the gates of the Bonegilla Migrant Centre outside Wodonga seeking a new life, Marcuse found himself there as an employee. And it was during this time he captured many of the landscapes his work is known for. Marcuse, who died in 1985, has works in the National Gallery of Victoria and the Australian War Museum and soon, 25 pieces will hang in the Burke Museum in Beechworth.

His son Peter Marcuse said his father had shown artistic ability from a very early age, and he still has pieces his father painted when he was in his teens. Peter said two months after Hitler came to power in 1933 his father received a letter which said because he was Jewish he could no longer be employed. "It was as simple as that," he said.

Ernest spent the next five years illustrating children's books anonymously to earn a living. In 1938 he moved to London where he met his wife remained for seven months, before moving to Australia as a refugee. "When he arrived in Australia one of the first things he did was to contact newspapers for work. Marcuse was employed by The Argus but little more than a year later he got a letter stating due to his German background, he could no longer be employed in a classification such as the newspaper. He was able to continue to work as a commercial artist, but the Australian Army wanted to use his talents. "He was considered a stateless person, but because the government wanted to use his talent they reversed his status and he was appointed a position at the officers' training school at Bonegilla, Peter said. He was employed there for about 12 months, 1941-42, as a staff artist. Ernest drew individual rifles, equipment of the Japanese and combat methods all of which are now on display at the National War Museum in Canberra. While Ernest was employed to illustrate for the military, in his spare time he would camp in north east Victoria. Among the scenery he captured were the Kiewa River and the Lake Hume Reservoir. In 2019 several of Marcuse's landscapes of Bright and Wandiligong painted in the 1950s formed part of an exhibition at the Wangaratta Art Gallery. Some pieces are now on permanent display. From that, Peter stated, the Indigo Shire Council and the Burke Museum concluded: 'we need more of this work that relates to our area and State'.

Marcuse painted many iconic landmark locations around Melbourne, including the construction of key projects such as the West Gate Bridge and the National Gallery of Victoria. Marcuse's technical training is evident in his artistic iterations of such architectural projects, with perspective, volume and form carefully represented. Probably painted around 1966-7, this substantial artwork of the iconic Westgate Bridge displays the imposing construction project in remarkable detail.

The West Gate Bridge is a steel, box girder, cable-stayed bridge in Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, spanning the Yarra River just north of its mouth into Port Phillip and is 2.6 kms long. It carries the West Gate Freeway and is a vital link between the inner city (CBD) and Melbourne's western suburbs, with many industrial estates in the West, and with the city of Geelong 80 kilometres to the south-west. Strong growth in Western suburbs along the route, and increased freight through the Port of Melbourne, has created one of the busiest road corridors in Australia carrying at least 200,000 vehicles on a daily basis. Like the Harbour Bridge in Sydney, the West Gate Bridge has become an iconic landmark in Melbourne, and Australia.

The bridge is currently facing a major upgrade, including a tunnel project estimated costing some $ 300 million, to allow for ever increasing (traffic) expansion from the Western suburbs and Geelong into Melbourne and beyond. The NGV collection, has several artworks by Ernest Marcuse depicting the construction of the Gallery during 1966-67. The building was completed in 1967 and officially opened in August 1968 by premier Henry Bolte. This is an important painting about an iconic engineering landmark "the Westgate Bridge" in Melbourne, Victoria, painted during its construction period by renowned artist Ernest Marcuse.

(1) The Reimann School, was a prestigious private school of German origin for practical design and later became the first commercial art school in Britain. Albert and Klara Reimann founded the Reimann School in Berlin in 1902. By 1914 they had developed a successful vocational curriculum that trained students not so much for the prevailing Arts and Crafts Movement, but for the design aspects of the commercial world. Graphics for printing, window display, stage design, fabric design, and fashion-related classes were offered. Driven from Germany by virulent Nazism the School was re-established at 4-10 Regency Street, London in January 1937.

The School and studios closed in 1940 - following the outbreak of World War II, and in 1943, the School's premises were destroyed by bombing, a fate which also befell the Reimann Schule in Berlin. A terribly sad ending for a private educational institution, that was held in high esteem, as a result of the wasteful destruction of war.

DELICATE, ELEGANT, AND COLORFUL KAKIEMON

Kakiemon decoration is a distinctive style of Japanese porcelain that emerged in the late 17th century. Named after its creator, Sakaida Kakiemon, this style of porcelain is characterized by its delicate, elegant, and colorful designs featuring motifs such as birds, flowers, and landscapes. The decorations are typically set against a milky-white, translucent background called "Nigoshide." Kakiemon porcelain became highly sought after in Europe, particularly in the 18th century.

During the 18th century, English porcelain manufacturers began producing their own versions of Kakiemon decoration in an attempt to cater to the high demand for these exquisite pieces. These English copies were influenced by the Japanese originals but were adapted to local tastes and materials. Some of the most prominent manufacturers of English Kakiemon-style porcelain during this period include Bow, Chelsea, and Worcester.

English copies of Kakiemon decoration (such as those by Bow) often retained the characteristic color palette, which included iron red, blue, green, and yellow overglaze enamels. The designs, however, often diverged from the Japanese originals, as English craftsmen reinterpreted the motifs and compositions to suit the Western market. This led to the creation of new patterns and styles, while still retaining the essence of the Kakiemon aesthetic.

These English adaptations of Kakiemon decoration were well-received in Europe, where they were considered exotic and fashionable. As a result, Kakiemon-style porcelain produced in England played a significant role in the development of English ceramic art during the 18th century. Collectors and enthusiasts today continue to appreciate the beauty and historical significance of these English Kakiemon-inspired pieces.
